Russian instructors visit FHSU campus

Amy Weller

From New York to Manhattan, Kan., to Hays if one listens closely, one may hear a bit of Russian.

No, we are not being invaded. Four Russian science teachers are visiting the United States for the annual Kansas Association of Teachers of Science meeting and the Russian/American Education International Symposium, which is hosted by Kansas State University in Manhattan.

The four teachers from the Voronezh region of Russia, were in Hays Wednesday and Thursday to observe school systems.

"This visit is part of an international exchange effort designed to promote educational change and international cooperation between Russian and American teachers in the areas of science, environmental studies, mathematics and technology," President Ed Hammond, said.

While on campus Wednesday, the Russian teachers toured facilities, attended a reception at the College of Education and observed an elementary school social studies classroom. A city of Hays tour followed the campus tour and shopping concluded the day. Thursday, the Russian educators observed Hays public schools, inter-

The Hays Children's Center, 1401 Hall St., and the Hays Jaycees are jointly sponsoring the annual "Rope 'Em Ride" Saturday.

The two-day event is the sixth in a series of benefit functions and all proceeds from the event will be go towards providing for the welfare of children in the community.

Kathy Albert, public relations coordinator of the Children's Center, said the Children's Center is a non-profit corporation with two locations and 300 children in Hays. She said the programs are designed to meet the needs of the children from birth to 12 years of age.

"Children having learning difficulties ranging from mild to severe are provided with special programs in the developmental areas of speech, language, hearing, mental development and social behavior," Albert said.

She said, "Rope 'Em Ride" will be a great adventure and fun day of cycling through the beautiful landscape surrounding Hays for approximately 100 riders from cities throughout the state.

"This year's tour is highlighted by special tours through the Sternberg Museum, Old Fort Hays, and a lecture presentation on General George Custer."

Albert said the riders also can get free admission to the Fort Hays State rodeo and FHSU.

A press conference was held Wednesday morning in which Hammond presented the visitors with a Tiger lapel pin and FHSU T-shirts.

The guests presented Hammond with souvenir spoons.

Roman Kuchar, retired professor of foreign languages at Fort Hays, served as the translator.

"We at Fort Hays State University continually are striving to internationalize our campus," Hammond said. "Therefore, I am delighted to welcome our Russian visitors to Hays."

The visitors were Svetlana A. Ruunetsova, principal of the biological and chemical gymnasium, Voronezh; Sergey A. Chuev, teacher of history of science, head of the department of planning, committee of science and education, Voronezh; Svetlana S. Dolgikh, teacher of geology, Voronezh; and Rosa Lendia, teacher of English, Voronezh.

"We are very glad to come here to your university. We are convinced the Americans and Russians are very alike, our souls are very similar. It is helpful for us to come and see your system of education," Chuev said.

Mary Hoy, professor of special education and dean of the college of education, coordinated the visit.

"Routes have been designed to provide for 5, 10, 25, 50 and 65 miles each day with sags (rest areas) staffed by volunteers every eight to 10 miles. The riders will be provided with aid, beverages and snacks," Albert said.

She said, "Teams can opt for 65 miles Saturday or 100 miles Sunday. The route is from Hays to Pfeifer, Victoria and Catherine and then to Hays Saturday and from Hays to Ellis, Liebenthal and turn around from Liebenthal to Hays Sunday."

"The registration will begin at 8 a.m. tomorrow and 9 a.m. Sunday. Those who need lodging facilities tonight and tomorrow night can stay at the Children's Center, but should bring their own sleeping bags and personal items."

The cost of participation ranges from $15 for an additional rider for one day to $100 for a business team. Albert said the riders will range from six-years olds to 60 years olds. I. B. Dent, director of the Memorial Union Activities Board, which is also involved in the event, said students should participate in this event for fun and social service.

Dent said efforts have been made to bring more students from residential halls, fraternities and sororities and other campus groups and organizations. But the response has not been as expected as students have jobs and final exams ahead.

'Season Finale' concert to include 150 performers

Scott Aust
Entertainment reporter

The Fort Hays State Music Department will present "Season Finale" at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Beach/Schmidt Performing Arts Center.

The concert will include more than 150 performers from the Hays Symphony, the University Concert Choir and the Hays Community Choir.

Julian Shew, assistant professor of music, is the musical director and conductor for the concert. James L. Murphy, professor of music, conducts the university choir and Rager Moore II, instructor of music, conducts the community choir.

The concert will be performed in two parts.

Opening the concert is Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet" which is described as a "symphonic poem, a one-movement orchestral work with a title and a definite program" popular in the 19th Century, according to the program notes by Martin Shapiro, professor of music.

According to the notes, Tchaikovsky does not try to re-tell Shakespeare's entire story of "Romeo and Juliet." Instead, he "transformed the most important elements of the play into music using traditional sonata form."

Maurice Durufle's "Requiem" will be the second part of the program and will feature two vocal soloists, Tonya Currier, instructor of music, and Matthew Grove, Hays junior.

Currier is a mezzo-soprano and Grove is a baritone.

"Requiem" is a Catholic Mass for the Dead sung in Latin. The English translation will be included in the concert's programs.

Currier said her solo, "Pie Jesu," is the "peaceful part" of the "Requiem."

"It's really going to be a beautiful concert," she said. Durufle is one of a number of composers who "transformed the Catholic Mass for the Dead" into a musical expression of universal appeal," according to the program notes.

The composer relies on "the melodies of Gregorian Chant, the traditional music of the Medieval Church, while his harmonies blend the warmth and richness of Romanticism."

Durufle, who died in 1986, is noted for his modern use of "rhythmic and metric flexibility" which manifests itself in "constantly changing time signatures."

Tickets, available at the door, are $4 for adults, $2 for senior citizens and free for students with I.D. and children.

FHSU international student attends 'Islamic Thought' seminar

Upendra Sabat
Staff writer

Mohammad Tukur Bawa, Nigeria freshman, attended the inaugural national seminar of the International Institute of Islamic Thought held in Herndon, Va.

Bawa was the only representative of the Muslim community not only from the Fort Hays State, but from the entire state of Kansas.

The Student Development Project of the Institute, which organized the three day beginning April 15, aimed at creating and nourishing a broad and global outlook among Muslims and develop a sense of responsibility among them.

Bawa said the seminar dealt with the economic issues of third world countries, their socio-cultural dimensions, educational and political aspects and the concept of leadership among Muslims in general.

He said the seminar was addressed by Muslim intellectuals such as

Bawa

Auwal Yadudu, Omar H. Kasule, director, leadership training bureau IFFSO, and Sulayman Nyang, professor of African studies at Howard University.

"The conference was a good forum for the participants to know each other. The organizers also wanted to know about the Muslim communities at different places," Bawa said.

"There have been some wrong impressions in some quarters, either because of inaccurate depictions by media or improper interpretations of events, that Muslims, in general, are violent terrorists and killers. It is our duty to change that impression."

"In fact, the Muslim religion preaches peace and brotherhood and people should know that. The organizers of the conference stressed on this point and urged everyone to make it his duty to see that knowledge about Islam improves."

Bawa said, "I informed the coordinator of the institute of the problems we face in Hays. We do not have a mosque here and we move every week from one friend's apartment to another for our prayers."

Mahmoud Farh El-Den, assistant professor of department of mathematics and computer science and advisor of FHSU Muslim Students Association, said this was a good beginning for the Hays Muslim community to communicate with the national organization.

He said, "The Muslim community here had a feeling of isolation. The seminar and Bawa's participation in it has changed that scenario and we hope the channel of communication will open now."

"Some day we hope to construct a mosque here in Hays which would fulfill our religious needs. We are proud of Bawa."

Mohammed Bello Aikali, president of FHSU Muslim Students Association, said, "We feel good. Bawa's attending the seminar makes us feel that some day we can solve our problems here."

"It is great to feel that you have an organization on which we can rely. We can also discuss our problems with them and expect some solution."

Abdullah Mohammed, Nigeria freshman, said, "We feel really good as we now have an organization on whom we can look forward to get some guidelines."

"Now we can wait for the day when we will get facilities to observe our festivals according to Muslim traditions," Javed Iqbal, Pakistani junior, said.

Prejudice and hatred need to be stopped

Last Friday night, anti-Semitic material was placed on cars outside of The Mall Cinema, 2925 Vine St., which was showing the movie "Schindler's List."

The movie is about a man who saves Jewish people during the Holocaust of World War II.

The literature came from Spotlight, an anti-Semitic magazine, and protested the Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C. and advertised a book that questioned the history of the Holocaust.

Everyone likes to think of Hays as a safe haven. It's the kind of town where we don't have to worry about our children getting involved in gangs or drive-by shootings, we don't have homeless people living on the streets and we all have a respect for the differences among us, whether it be race, religion or gender.

Obviously, this is not true among everyone. Someone in our town is spreading anti-Semitic garbage in an attempt to further the prejudice we thought was lacking here. It is saddening to know that we live among people who would deny that the Holocaust ever took place.

We all need to be on our guard against this kind of prejudice. We would like to deny that it takes place here, but with this incident, we can't avoid the truth. Someone in our community is spreading a hatred, and it needs to be stopped before it goes any further.

If someone is making prejudiced comments, don't be afraid to take a stand. If the only voice that is heard is the voice of prejudice and not the voice of reason, then the hatred will only continue.

Letters to the editor

Students have to strive for education

I would like to respond to Duane Simpson's letter "Various factors cause 'worthless' education" in the Tuesday edition of the University Leader.

First of all, I have to agree with much of what Simpson had to say. I imagine it wouldn't be all that difficult for students to receive high grades at Fort Hays State without having to put that much time or effort into studying.

In his letter, Simpson said "I am recommending that we focus on educating the students," and while I think that he has the right ideas, Simpson missed one important aspect to higher education.

It's the students' responsibility for his education, not the teacher's and not the university's. No one else is to blame but the students, if he didn't make the most out of the opportunities available here at FHSU.

A student can receive a high quality education at FHSU, but many students have the attitude that education should be given to them, instead of something they have to work for.

I am very proud of the education I have received here, but I also realized an education is something I have to strive for. Students should realize if they don't go to classes, of course, their education isn't going to be that great.

Learning isn't even limited to just showing up to class either. It involves interaction and participation in and out of classes for students to get the most out of their education. But one great quality FHSU has over many other schools is that it provides wonderful learning opportunities for every student attending, that is if he wants it.

Unlike with larger schools, a student can become involved in almost anything if he so desires, without having to be an upperclassman majoring in that field. For instance, if a student wants to try out for a play or musical, he can, without having to be a theater or music major.

Plus any talented student can write or take pictures for the student publications without having to be a journalism major. And there are so many other opportunities, like Student Government Association or a variety of clubs, that are available to students.

So what does this have to do with higher education? Everything. Getting involved, whether it's with classes or extracurricular events, teaches a student about life, about other people, and most importantly, about himself.

Granted, FHSU, as a university, will always have room for improvement. But I am really tired of hearing students complain about the quality of education when they never even tried to get involved first.

If a student truly believes FHSU needs improving, I think he should consider how to improve himself first. The way I look at it, whenever a student puts down FHSU, he puts himself down too.

Success not only measured by grade point

I would like to respond to the letter by Duane Simpson, Kansas City sophomore, concerning the worth of education received at Fort Hays State with a few questions.

First, who are the enlightened souls that have deemed education at FHSU 'worthless'? Second, how are these people qualified to make such sweeping statements, and why do they hide behind an impressionable sophomore's pen? Third, who told this Kansas City sophomore that it takes extra effort for a professor to make the material more challenging for students?

And finally, who told Simpson that success is dependent on a person's grade point average in college? I know people who were 4.0 students in college and, since they thought that learning ended after graduation, didn't amount to a hill of beans. On the other hand, I know people that didn't exactly excel in college, but went on to quite successful lifestyles.

Now, I don't want to make this response so complicated that Simpson won't be able to understand it, but since we are dealing with assumptions, let's talk about his. According to Simpson, who speaks for society, success in America is measured in tangibles. I, however, am not talking about his "Yuppie Paradise" model. I'm talking about the kind of success that makes a person look forward to each day of work, family time, learning time, and play, the kind of success that can last a lifetime.

Oh, just one more thing. I'm a student at FHSU, and I don't recall anyone telling me that getting A's without learning was the way to go. As a matter of fact, I recall being told the exact opposite.

Simpson, what a person gets out of their education is what they put into it. I truly believe this. I say if you want to attack your education like a shark, then kudos. However, if you feel you alone have the moral authority to determine how I will learn, then be prepared for long term, stiff resistance, because with your attitude there may be a hanging, but it won't be President Ed Hammond at the end of the rope.

Student disappointed to hear FHSU education 'worthless'

I was reading the Tuesday issue of the University Leader, when I came across a letter written by Duane Simpson, Kansas City sophomore, that just radiated pure ignorance and arrogance. Now I can't speak for all of Fort Hays State, but I was truly disappointed to hear that my education here is totally worthless, especially after paying thousands of dollars in tuition.

First, Simpson, I would like to know who your "critics" are that you referred to. Second, who says that your fantastically wild misconceptions are fact. Third, this country depends on the "consumeristic attitude" that you put part of the blame on for your so-called "problem."

As far as teachers and students go, I don't know what classes you've been taking (underwater basket weaving or cross-country full-contact fishing or whatever), but I've never had a grade handed to me on a silver platter. You may have been given some freebies, which is obvious since you actually got into a school with this attitude, but I can tell that at least the majority of us have never had that experience. Most of us have worked our butts off to get where we are.

I do agree that people in general these days are becoming too lazy to think long enough to develop an educated opinion of their own, but reading your spiel makes me wonder if it's safe to let people think up their own cock-eyed points of view like yours.

But I'll tell you what, Mister Holier-than-Thou, if you're so damn brilliant, I suggest you hurry up and save the world, run for president, God knows we need one.

And honestly, the only things I see FHSU lacking in are parking places and school spirit. I thought the people arguing about who was the best Jayhawk fan on campus was pretty anti-FHSU, but you, my friend, take the cake.

I am truly sorry that we are all too stupid for you to associate with, but you already know you're something special. Although we all should feel truly blessed by your presence on this campus, perhaps it would be a good idea for you to put on your bell-bottoms and tie-dyes, go back to Kansas City and raise the intelligence of both schools. After all, I may not be a rocket scientist, but thanks to FHSU, I soon will be.

McFadden not authorized to decide on 'good taste'

I am writing in response to the response by Greg McFadden, Amarillo senior, to our campaign posters.

First, I would like to say, well, you caught me. I mean, I must be out of my mind to make posters to get people's attention. The last thing anyone would want is for someone to read a poster they made. I guess it's kind of like writing a letter to the editor, you know. The last thing you probably wanted was any attention when you wrote that letter and it goes the same way for me. Geez, I hope nobody reads this.

Next, I would like to thank you, for now we know who belongs in the position to decide what's done in good taste and what's not. I guess I can bring all my albums and books to you and have you decide whether or not it's okay for me to listen to them or read them. Boy, it sure is good to have someone like you around to lead us to our good ways and keep us from straying too far into the realm of sin.

Finally, when I run for Student Government Association president next year, I'll just have you make my posters for me. Don't worry, you won't have to proofread them in front of your creative writing class for spelling and grammatical errors. I trust you.

Tigers sweep Kearney, head to Mesa State

Ryan Buchanan
Sports editor

After sweeping a double-header with the University of Nebraska-Kearney Tuesday, The Fort Hays State baseball team heads to Mesa State College this weekend for a four-game Mile High Baseball League series.

"Certainly Mesa State will be a tough series for us. The rest of the road is tough from here on out," Coach Curtis Hammeke, said.

The four-game set will end FHSU's regular conference season and lead into the MHL post-season tournament.

"I think it's very important that we play well going into the remainder of the season, and going into the tournament," Hammeke, said.

The Tigers are currently 31-12 overall and 10-3 in league play.

"I'd like to see us get back onto a little bit of a streak, but that's going to be very difficult to do, but if it's worth having, it's not supposed to be easy," Hammeke said.

FHSU 4, Nebraska-Kearney 3

Senior right-hander Joe Rosetta took his fourth win of the season and junior reliever Chris Young picked up his eighth save.

The Tigers got the early advantage in the second inning as senior catcher Spike Mitchell lifted one out of the yard for his seventh round-tripper on the year.

In the third, FHSU scored again as senior outfielder Chad Peed walked and came home on an error to put the Tigers up, 2-0.

Mitchell came back in the fourth inning to hit his eighth homer of the season and make the score 3-0.

UN-Kearney got on the board in the bottom of the fourth on a two-run homer, to pull within one point of the Tigers.

In the fifth inning, UN-Kearney tied the score at three.

Young came out of the bullpen and was able to hold off UN-Kearney for the rest of the game. In top of the seventh, Peed singled home senior outfielder Hank Humphries for the go-ahead run for the Tigers.

Rosetta allowed seven hits, walked two and struck out four as FHSU chalked up the win.

FHSU 10, Nebraska-Kearney 4

The second game was stopped after only five innings of play due to severe cold weather conditions. At the time the game was stopped, the temperature had reached 36 degrees with winds gusting to 40 miles per hour. The wind chill was estimated at six degrees.

Nevertheless, freshman hurler Danny Dinkel was able to post his third win of the season.

The Tigers had only two hits in the contest, but UN-Kearney committed a phenomenal eight errors.

UN-Kearney scored first on a two-run homer in the second.

FHSU turned around in the top of third to score three runs. Sophomore shortstop Brian Keck and Peed came home on back-to-back errors by the Antelopes. Then, junior first-baseman Billy Grace came in on a wild pitch.

The Tigers scored seven runs on only two hits in the fourth to make the score 10-2.

UN-Kearney turned around in the bottom of the fourth to score two runs, but it was not enough as the game was called and Tigers prevailed.

Dinkel allowed seven hits, walked one and struck out three.
